“With motion capture technology, we are able to capture the subtleties of a player’s real-life movement and translate it into a more fluid, realistic and accurate performance,” said Andrew “Bucket” Duncan, Head of FIFA. “Players will be able to feel the differences between the various passing options, including flat, curved or unpredictable passes.” “We have also augmented FIFA 22 with the most complete and action-packed content to date. This includes new teams and player bundles, striking new features, animations and progression which are designed to further blur the line between virtual and real. The result is a robust football game that is the most authentic yet,” continued Duncan. Here’s everything you need to know about FIFA 22: Team of the Year — Montreal Impact

“Our biggest challenge was to create a team that represented a mix of our modern game but also the appeal of our past” said Christian Gourcuff, Technical Director for Montreal Impact. “We wanted to keep our identity while still bringing our game into the present. We were lucky to have an English manager that really understood our philosophy.” “After a grueling season, we knew we had to innovate to retain our place in the playoffs,” he continued. “Our philosophy is to be the most effective and aggressive in the midfield. Our players enjoy that mentality. We focus on the basics: an attack that runs along the ground and then maintains possession; aggressive defense that compact and hold our shape. This year, we focused on defending well together to win the ball back. Our clear identity is anchored in our core skill of direct, hard balls from the back to the front.” Montreal Impact set scoring records in the regular season and won both the Eastern Conference and the Canadian Championship. In addition to those victories, the Impact became the first-ever Canadian team to play in the CONCACAF Champions League final.
