What's new:

Check For someone like me who's only been playing on PC since the Dreamcast days, there's no doubt that I was bursting with anticipation when Bethesda first announced their new DLC pack being called "Mutated". I could not care less what Fallout 4 was like, it was all about what The Elder Scrolls Legends is like. Then after some pretty nonsensical hype about this game I got bored and wrote about it, very boring, very stereotypical. Now we're on to my favorite part in this generation of gaming - the Discovery DLC. For those of you who didn't know - this is a sequel to The Elder Scrolls V: Skyrim. It was an expansion of the original which became a massive crowd pleaser. It introduced to us the class system, dragons, the world map, and more. The general consensus was that the DLC was good in what it did but nothing special. After all, it was "just an expansion pack". All that changes is that after a couple of days playing, I found the game to be a complete grind. Simply putting in hours of quests to level to a high point only to be stopped by an unavoidable skill gap, or a way too high combat level. I have never played an Elder Scrolls game before and I was expecting a lot from this expansion. However, I must admit that even at the highest level - I wasn't getting anywhere close to breaking 60 on Normal nor Legendary. To top it all off, there seemed to be way too many dragons to fight. I have found you need like over 1,000 kills to get credits for seeing a dragon. Then you realize that armor pieces aren't even worth much. A little comparison on the Weapons Tab and I can tell you the item stack isn't worth much to you when you're fighting a dragon. The enchanter has a harder time in this expansion than in vanilla Skyrim and the upgrade of armor will be a royal hassle. All in all, it was becoming clear that I wasn't even close to being able to make it past level 10 before I was forcibly stopped. I had already completed the game and there were only 10-12 hours to go for 0.8k XP. So I put down my controller and I just lost interest. I didn't make a new account to play the other piece of DLC - Inferno, but I was sure that the fact that I had never played an Elder Scrolls game before and the short length of time that it will take me before
