Id. at 4. -3- Having acknowledged the error in the ALJ’s finding, we now turn to the question of substantial evidence. Upon such review, we will not ask whether we would have made the same finding had we been the factfinder. Rather, we determine whether the claimant has shown that the ALJ’s finding was not based on substantial evidence. Williams, 656 F.3d at 754. We may only reverse if we have a firm and definite conviction that a mistake has been made. Reed v. Barnhart, 399 F.3d 917, 920 (8th Cir. 2005). Although we have reservations about the ALJ's findings, we cannot say that reversal is necessary. The ALJ questioned the claimant's credibility at the hearing and relied upon a vocational expert's response that a person with a less-severe impairment could still work. The ALJ is in the
